Best Practices

As we look to our neighbour to the South, we are stunned by the numbers of people affected by the coronavirus. Many of us have relatives and close relationships to people in Washington, New York, and California. It is appropriate to feel powerless to help them, fearful that we might be impacted in the same way. However, it is also appropriate to feel just a bit of relief with the knowledge that here, in BC, we have taken the epidemic seriously. Faith in a higher power doesn't entitle us to do nothing. Rather, it empowers us to change what might seem inevitable. Here at the Snider Campus, we continue to use the best practices to stay healthy, recognizing the danger but knowing we can do something about it.

"A test of a people is how it behaves toward the old. It is easy to love children. Even tyrants and dictators make a point of being fond of children. But the affection and care for the old, the incurable, the helpless are the true gold mines of a culture." Abraham Joshua Heschel
